LONDON, July 31.

Further Particulars of the late Voyage round the World in his Majesty's Sloop Endeavour.

WE left Woolwich upon the 10th of July, 1768, and returned to the same place upon the same day, in 1771. Our passage to Madeira was eighteen days. We left England the 25th of August. The Endeavour, though well contrived for stowage, and a heavy sea, was, without exception, the dullest sailing vessel; to corroborate which, you will not find eight knots an hour upon our log-book, in the whole voyage. Upon this island Mr. Banks, by his great assiduity, discovered many rare and valuable plants, uncultivated, and even unknown to the Portugueze, particularly the Mango. Being well supplied with wine, we steered for Cape-Horn, after a stay of five days. When we had reached the length of Falkland's Isles, we had a gale of wind which brought us under our mainsail, but not continuing very long, we soon came to crowd more sail, and stretched away for the Cape, where we expected very bad weather from the accounts of all the navigators who had been that voyage. However, we coasted along till we came to the pitch of Terra del Fuego, having the winds variable from W. N. W. to E. N. E. and when we had reached the point of that prodigious promontory, with a fresh breeze, and one reef in our topsails, we stood to the southward into the latitude of 52 d. 9 m. S. where, after a calm for a few hours, a breeze sprung up at S. S. W. and we doubled the Cape at two tacks; after which, as to boast of such success, we even set top-gallant steering sails. We anchored at Terra del Fuego some time, and found the greatest hospitality from the natives, who, by many things amongst them, discovered plainly that they had an intercourse with Spanish America.---Here we were prodigiously alarmed, for Messrs. Banks and Solander, who, attended by two negroes, and some of the ship's crew, undertook to climb to the summit of a prodigious mountain upon this isle; leaving the ship about ten in the morning, and promising to be back by dinner, but they did not return till the following morning, which made a thousand doubts for their welfare, concluding that they must be either cut off by the natives, or devoured by the wild beasts. However the following morning relieved us from all dismal apprehensions, by their appearance: They informed us, that they had been so prodigiously wearied by the ascension of the mountain, that the two negroes were dead of fatigue, and that it was with the utmost difficulty they had saved Dr. Solander; for when they had attained about half way of the ascent, it was too far to retreat; and a wood above them promising some shelter, they gained it with much difficulty, and made a bower for Dr. Solander, who, after having some sleep, recovered his spirits to descend to the valley. We did not continue long upon the island of Terra del Fuego, before we pursued our voyage to George's Island, which lies about 17 degrees, south latitude; for Fuego produces little more than fish. Upon our arrival, the natives received us with much hospitality and joy; being now convinced from Captain Wallace's conduct, we really ment to befriend them: In consequence of which we exchanged presents, and set up our residence with them for three months. We found a most intelligent man amongst them, who, upon all occasions, was our friend and interpreter. This man, who was named Tobia, (a kind of a Savage priest) surprized us with the information of a large ship having been lately there, but she was departed westward; which, before his recital, we had some suspicion of, upon our discovering a number of European goods amongst them, particularly knives, and other iron implements. To discover these adventurers, we displayed all the European flags to Tobia, who immediately pitched upon the Spanish colours.

This convinced us of a prior visitor, which was afterwards confirmed to us upon our arrival at Batavia: It was a French ship that had made this voyage, upon observation or jealousy, of our repeated visits to those seas; and, to disguise their scheme, had always appeared under Spanish colours. But to return to George's Island: This island is about thirty leagues in circumference, of a circular form, situated amidst a number of other isles, some famed for turtle, fruits, or fish, but no other animals but hogs and dogs, which we devoured with great appetite, and found nothing equal to dog's flesh, but young lamb. The Islanders are very expert at fishing, which they pursue for their daily sustenance, and cocoa-nuts, palm wine, plantains, the bread-tree, and wild herbs, is the only produce of this spot. The earth is sandy, and capable of producing corn; but, amongst the variety of seeds and grains which we had carried out, we could get nothing to grow but mustard and cresses; the seeds being certainly damaged by the length of time, and the dryness of the air, or not properly packed up for so long an expedition. Their implements of war and agriculture are composed of wood and stone. A hatchet is made by tying a sharp flint stone upon a piece of wood, which cuts with uncommon sharpness; their fish-hooks are composed of mother of pearl, and their lines of women's hair, which is strong, black, and long. They use bows, arrows, and javelins of wood, which they throw with uncommon dexterity, and will strike birds in the air, or fishes in the sea with them.

We passed more than three months with these people, and upon our departure, two of them voluntarily sollicited us to come to England. Tobia was one of these, a sober, intelligent, discreet man: From him we learnt the language, and an account of above forty more islands, which were contiguous to George's Island. When we sailed from this island, we were in tolerable good health, but it was near three months before we reached New-Zealand; in which passage we were at times greatly distressed; we sailed round New-Zealand, where we found a clear coast and deep water, good bays, and good rivers. Navigators, before us, have believed this to be a continent, but it is no more than seventy miles round, having another island to the southward, between which there is a good passage: Here we were worse treated than ever, the natives being so brave and so jealous of their rights, that they would not suffer us to land, continually attacking our boats with stones and arrows, whenever we attempted to approach the shore, which obliged us to fire often amongst them, to convince them of our great superiority, by which many fell, and that created a general consternation amongst them. By these means we obtained conversations with them, (they perfectly understanding the tongue of Tobia) and persuading them at last to accept of presents from us; and, by bringing off a few, and treating them well, it was with the utmost difficulty afterwards that we could get rid of them; two in particular, when we left the island, swam after the ship to sea, declaring they would be murdered by their countrymen upon their return, for shewing such a partial attachment to us.

These are a brave warlike people; and though we staid fourteen days at one part of the isle, yet whenever we attempted to land at another, they always attacked us with great fury. They have one weapon of a strange construction, which, by turning it round very quick, produces a great smoak: This they always made use of, but we could not discover that any thing issued out of it, or that it made any explosion.

From hence we steered towards Batavia, and stopped at a small Dutch settlement in our passage, which had but one Dutchman upon it, but the island had a great number of Indians, over whom he styled himself the King of Kings. After we had properly gratified his mercenary disposition, the Indians brought us down buffaloes, fowls, vegetables, and fish, in abundance. From thence we pursued our course; but, upon a reef of rocks, five leagues from the land of New Holland, we struck, and lay seven hours on shore; but, at last, we happily got her off, and arrived safe at Batavia, where we repaired and refitted her.

We were all afflicted at this place with a violent flux and fever, which swept off six of our people in a morning. It was here we lost the ingenious Mr. Green, the faithful Tobia and his comrade. But no sooner had we quitted this unwholesome shore, but those who came away sick recovered at sea; and the fruits and vegetables of the Cape of Good Hope restored us to health and spirits. We left this earthly Paradise for St. Helena, and sailed from thence with the Portland, but we lost her company, and arrived in England with the loss of forty-five people out of ninety in a voyage of three years. Before I conclude, I must not omit how highly we were indebted to a milch goat; she was three years in the West-Indies, and was once round the world before in the Dolphin, and never went dry the whole time: We mean to reward her services in a good English pasture for life.

AUGUST 19. We are informed that the same language prevails in all the islands of the South Sea, which were visited by Mr. Banks and Dr. Solander, which is perhaps the strongest proof that could be given that they are all originally derived from the same stock, or at least have some time maintained a very strict intercourse with one another.

We are assured that there are four gentlemen of penetration now on their travels through Spain and Portugal, in order to discover and procure materials for encountering the ministry the ensuing winter. The Duke of Richmond and Lord Chatham, are the framers of this business, and will find means to defray the expences attending it.

Extract of a Letter from a young Gentleman on board his Majesty's Sloop Endeavour, giving some Account of the Natives of Otahitee or George's Island.

"Their religion acknowledges one Supreme Being, whom they conceive to be too great to attend to the prayers of man; they therefore invoke him through mediators, who they believe are, in general, their great men departed. They do not kneel to an image, they only offer up a sacrifice of every thing they mean to partake of saying, "sure the Deity has a right to an offering of what he gave." Their burials are more singular than any other custom; when a man dies, he is placed upon a bier, and a shed is erected over him, made of leaves of trees; this mausolem is placed very often near their own houses, and though the body is in a disagreeable putrid state, they never seem to take any notice of the offensiveness; the corpse remains in that condition till the flesh is entirely consumed, and then the skeleton is interred in the burying-ground, which is done round with stones in the form of our country church-yards. The origin of man they believe to be from a chosen pair made by the great God, and that we are all descendants of them, that the Deity formed the earth of continents and isles, and that the Europeans who visit them are of the great land, but when that he had formed the sea, he towed the great earth by a string upon it, which going so quick, make many parts to break off, and those composed islands.

"Their women are of a copper colour, well made, and well featured, with jet-black hair, which they always wear braided up with false hair. They wear a kind of cloth over their bodies, made from the cloth tree, which is very thin, and not strong; but when they want it for warmth, they make many folds of it, and stick it together by gums; they have another kind, which they call mourning cloth, stained with yellow on one side, and brown on the other. They marry at nine and ten, they bear many children, and at twenty-two are old and ugly. A virgin is to be purchased here with the unanimous consent of the parents, for three nails and a knife: I own I was a buyer of such commodities; and after some time married one of my nut brown sultanaes, and then became so habituated to their manners and a hut, that I even left my lady and the island with reluctance. They have but one fashion amongst them, which is of a singular outré nature, and that is of painting their posteriors of a jet black, which no woman is suffered to neglect. They are not very decent in their amours, having little regard to either place or person: This is not general amongst them, though it is often done and seen. Upon occasions of festivity the women dance in the most indecent manner, performing a thousand obscene gesticulations, like the Indostan dancing girls. The only instrument of musick to divert them at these times, are large drums, and flutes made of reeds, in the form of our common flute, which is played upon by the wind of the nose, instead of the mouth."

AUGUST 20. The late intercourse between the courts of Versailles and Madrid has been more close, and the dispatches more frequent than ever. The internal dissensions in France are now drawing to a conclusion; the French King has got money from the Dutch at exorbitant interest; and these two circumstances, which may be regarded as the axis on which their whole system turns, being now changed in their favour, it is likely they will not lose much longer time in commencing their intended hostilities against Great-Britain.

By letters from Warsaw, the 31st of July, we learn, that they had just received the news of the Russians, under the command of General Bawr, having retaken Giurwego from the Turks, a great number of whom were made prisoners and sent to Choczim.

Advices from Vienna mention, that a great body of Imperial troops have assembled at Buda: On the 14th instant a corps of between thirty and forty thousand men were to be encamped at Pest, under the command of the Duke of Saxe Teschen: The frontiers on the side of Katzka are guarded by thirty-five thousand men, and there are about twenty thousand in Transylvania and Temeswaer; many Grecian families established in these two provinces have retired into Walachia, and defend themselves against the troops, who had orders to prevent their emigration. It is from these circumstances, the report has gone abroad of intended hostilities between the forces of Vienna and those of Russia.

It is universally expected at Vienna, that, in the course of the present month, the Imperial Eagle will be displayed on the ramparts of Orsowra and Belgrade, and that Walachia, Bosnia and Servia, will be under the government of the Emperor.

AUGUST 22. It is supposed that the conquest and government of the island of Corsica has cost the French more than they will be ever able to sell it for.

Private letters from Holland by Tuesday's mail, give an account that the health of the King of Prussia daily declines, and that his memory greatly fails him, insomuch that his physicians have advised him to retire from his business for some time, and to leave the management of government to those whom he can confide in; to which his Majesty replied, that it was dangerous for a King to trust the reigns of government in the hands of those about him, as their principal aim would be to enrich themselves and their families, without consulting what would be conducive to the welfare and happiness of his subjects, which would naturally produce discontents all over the kingdom; an instance of which, his Majesty said, might be seen in a neighbouring nation.

VIENNA, August 2. The cause of the sudden coolness that has lately subsisted between the Imperial court and the French King, and which daily increases, is now perfectly unravelled. Our Ambassador at Paris has, by his great abilities, diligence, and penetration, sent such information of the finesse and perfidy of the French, as not only clearly explains this mystery, but their whole political system for this last twelve-month. With infinite pains and perseverance the French have laboured, for some time, to influence the Imperial cabinet to collect the whole military force of the House of Austria in Hungary; to leave ungarrisoned all her fortified towns in Germany, Flanders, and Italy; and, with this vast army of Imperialists, to dictate terms of peace to Russia, and, if refused, to attack the Russians at the same instant they should be engaged with the Ottoman troops. France not only promised a magnificent subsidy for the charge of such a campaign, that must have expended so much treasure for the marching of such an army from Flanders and the Milanese into the Turkish dominions; but likewise engaged, that the French and Spanish fleets, in the Mediterranean, should sail to the Levant, and unitedly attack the Russian fleet, as well as lend a considerable body of troops in the Morea and at the Dardanelles. Such were the promises of France, none of which she ever had the slightest idea of performing, excepting the embarkation of troops. They were to be landed indeed, not upon any part of the Turkish territories, but at Genoa; nor long to remain there in garrison. The Milanese being destitute of troops, such an opportunity was not to be lost, Mantua was the object. Austria was supposed not to have any objection to such an operation, as it would awe the Venetians, and prevent their fleet uniting with the Russians, taking possession of the Morea for themselves, and having the advantage of defeating the Turks. This political objection the French declared could not be obtained, if the fleet cruized in the Adriatic; for it was uncertain their being able to prevent the junctions of the Russians and Venetians; and without the French fleet the Ottomans would be unequal even to the Russians alone. France well knew, being in possession of Mantua with a good garrison, and a line of troops extending to the mountains, she should prevent the return of the Austrians into the Milanese, and dictate to all Italy, except Piedmont.

By the fidelity of some Germans in the French service, a discovery was made of the plan formed for seizing of Luxemburg, upon which expedition French battalions only were to be employed; the French ministry being convinced there was no garrison at Luxemburg to oppose them, therefore, if their numbers were great, they might perhaps have resolution to succeed. The impossibility of employing the German battalions was obvious; for they would sooner revolt than march upon such a service, so infamous, so dishonourable.

Our court is in the highest degree of agitation, and so much enraged, that it is expected the French Ambassador will be immediately ordered to leave Vienna, and conducted to the frontiers with the same marks of disgrace, as a French minister was some years past from the Imperial court of Petersburgh.

HAMBURGH, August 9. In a late assembly of the burghers of this city, they came to a resolution of granting a tax of one quarter per cent. on all their capitals and estates, in order to raise supplies sufficient for the extraordinary expences incurred by the inundation.---The gardens are not free from the water yet; and the only passage over the lands continues to be in boats. The charitable contributions raised in the churches on the fast-day, upon this occasion, amounted to twenty-seven thousand three hundred and forty marks (1826 l. sterl.) and the British factory made a donation of one thousand six hundred and sixty-nine marks, (111 l. 5 s. 4 d. sterl.)

PETERSBURGH, July 28. We have just received accounts, that Prince Dolgorucki, after having defeated twenty-seven thousand Turks under the walls of Caffa, took that fortress, and made the Serastier and a thousand men prisoners; the rest of the garrison, with the Abbasa Bassa, made their escape in vessels. At the same time the Turks left the fortress of Jegnicale, and the castle of Kertsch, which commands the entrance of the Lake of Azow and the Black Sea. In the fortress were found seventy pieces of cannon, and a large magazine of provisions and arms. Prince Dolgorucki, has now nothing further to do than to take the fortress of Balacklaw, the strongest in all the Crimea, to be master of the whole Peninsula.

PARIS, August 9. M. Bastard, counsellor of state is soon to set out for Besancon, in order to suppress the Parliament of Franche Comte. It is said the Duke of Randan is to go thither on the same account.

KINGSTON, (Jamaica) SEPTEMBER 7.

On Tuesday morning last about 40 minutes past seven o'clock, a most violent shock of an Earthquake was felt in this town, and parts adjacent, nay, it was so great, that it is supposed the whole island felt it; many chimneys were thown down; the walls of several houses have received great rents; the barracks in this town much damaged; many places in St. David's have likewise felt the effects of its force, and it is the opinion of most people, that had it continued a little longer, this town must have been laid in ruins; it is believed that this was the severest Earthquake that has happened in this island since the year 1692. The consternation of the people was so great, that many attempted to jump out of their balconies, &c. The same day about nine o'clock, a small shock happened, the next morning two more, one about nine o'clock, and the other about ten, also several others since, but no damage done by these.

SEPTEMBER 14. On Sunday last, a small sloop arrived from Carthagena, by whom we have the melancholy news of the loss of the sloop Charming Sally, Captain Scott, from this island, on that coast, and the cruel murder of the Captain and his whole crew, except two Curacoa mulatto men, supposed to be committed by a Mulatto, trading on the Spanish coast, a native of this island, who being tempted by the success Captain Scott had met on this voyage, and his having on board a considerable sum of money, killed the Captain himself, and with the assistance of the people he had with him, destroyed the crew: On their accomplishing so far of their horrid design, they took the money out of the vessel, cut her adrift, and let her drive against the rocks, by which means she was soon destroyed.
